Tories Increase Majorities in 2 Special Votes

LONDON, April 28 (AP)—A strong trend toward the opposition Conservative party was shown in two special elections yesterday for the House of Commons.

The Conservatives retained the seats of High Wycombe in Buckinghamshire and Epsom and Ewell in Surrey with heavy majorioes. Both traditionally are safe Tory constituencies. In High Wycombe, FUR Salf. Public opinion polls had forecast for months that the Socialist-Communist alliance would unseat the center-right coalition which has ruled France for 20 years.

> Fragile Alliance Their failure to do so, although by a small margin, shattered the al-ready fragile alliance with the Socialists and stunned the entire left.

Many Socialists and some of the Communist intellectuals said the Communist Party had purposefully turned away voters by extremist statements, preferring to remain in opposition rather than share power as a junior partner of the Socialists. In his report, Mr. Marchais swept aside all such arguments and reaffirmed that Communist policy was "correct" from start to finish

One suggestion was that the party leadership was in the throes of a struggle for control between Euronunists and hardline pro-Moscow elements.

Great Changes

Mr. Marchais has brought great changes to the party in its relations with the Soviet Union over the last three years but he still remains far from the stand adopted by the Spanish Communists, who bave dropped references to Lenin as one of their mentors.

Many of the men with whom Mr.

Marchais shares power were already in bigh position during the cold war when the French Communists were the surest allies of the Soviet Union in the West

Internal French political preoccupations have resulted in their agreeing that some distance must be taken with Moscow but they are about suggestions that the party should liberalize from within.

There was little sign, however, that the agitation at the top of the party and among the intellectuals had any repercussions among the party's rank and file.

France Hopes to Lead World in Solar Energy Production, Use

By Geneva Overholser

VEYNES, France, April 28 (IHT)—As Americans prepare to celebrate their first Sun Day on Wednesday the 3.800 residents of this high Alpine village are pre-paring for their third annual fetes solaires, part of their effort to become a tiny solar capital and part of France's rise as a world solar When the fesoval occurs this summer, a new solar-heated home will be open for viewing, and locally produced solar cap-tors will be on exhibit, along with a range of smaller products, from fruit driers to boxes for cooking eggs, courtesy of the Alpine sun. Veynes was a railroad center but lost its vitality when France electrified its rail network and workshops that had been based Wanting to keep the popula-tion from following the migrato-ry trend toward the cities, the town's mayor convinced an industry in Lyons to create a small factory here for the production of solar captors.

eliminated the need for the repair

That gave rise to the first solar festivities two years ago. Last year, they added a new dimension: Architects were invited to submit plans for a solar-powered home, built on a sun-blessed site donated by the town. A local mason, carpenter and plumber formed a society for that pur-

Veynes has managed to promote itself as an Alpine paradise while furnishing work to part of its population — all thanks to 2,600 hours of sunshine a year.

Taking advantage of the sun's energy is becoming more and more common in France. From a large movie theater in central Paris to the Guy-de-Chauliac hospital in Montpellier, from the Nice airport passenger terminal to police headquarters in Bagnois-sur-Ceze, more and more solar water heating and space beating installations are being built in

Though France is "second in the world in the importance of financial credits consacrated to research in solar energy," accord-ing to the February issue of Solar News International, it is far behind the United States. France will spend $32 million this year compared to about $250 million in the United States. But the percentage of the GNP is about the Government support is 30 per cent higher than last year, and represents three-fourths of what is given to research in France under the Delegation of New Energies created three years ago.

The French employer's union has declared its interest in solar energy, and all industries producing solar energy products have recently formed an associa-tion called Gesol.

Incentive Program

The government last month announced an incentive program, offering 1,000 francs (about $200) per lodging for installing solar water heaters, which cost between 1,500 and 7,400 francs, depending on size.

And they last year organized the internacional Conference on Solar Energy, to which countries fronting on the Mediterannean were invited. At the meeting, French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing said that France wanted to "put what we know into an open file" for the mutual benefit of all, with an aim toward "solar

The impetus for this comes from the success that France has had in a town called Odeillo in the western Pyrenees, where researchers come from all over the world to experiment with the high temperatures produced by a huge solar furnace. This dramatie installacion put France on the map as a leader in solar energy, and prompted many of the steps that followed. France is now building two smaller solar stations, and is parncipating in a cooperative Euro-pean solar power plant that is un-der construction in Sicily.

In addition, the state is financing a photovoltaic cells research laboratory in the Maritime Alps.

But future prospects are not as bright as solar supporters here wish. While some U.S. government agencies predict that 20 to 30 per cent of the U.S. energy needs will be met by solar energy by the end of the century, the French government believes that the sun will supply only 2 to 3 per cent of France's needs at that time — compared with 78 per cent to be supplied by nuclear and leaving.

The black leaders of the transioonal government are just as uncertain about the new situation. Still surrounded by white civil servants, secretaries and guards, they are groping for ways to illustrate their new authority to the 6.7 million blacks.

Clearly, this young and fragile experiment in multiracial cooperation poses the dilemma of satisfying Rhodesia's two fundamentally different populations with contrasting fears and hopes. The new ruling Executive Council must also con-vince skeptical Western and Afri-can states that it has a mandate from a majority of whites and blacks, including those who belong to the guerrilla alliance, the Patriot-

War Getting Worse

Moreover, it must do this while waging a war that, by most accounts, is going badly and getting worse. The war is costing nearly $2 millioo a day and even the reported reintroduction of South African military forces in the southern border area is unlikely to provide much relief.

The military situation is exceedingly complicated. Military analysts in constant contact with the troops speak of sharply declining morale among white officers. "Nobody," an analyst said, "wants to be the last white man to die for Zimbabwe [the African name for Rhodesia]."

In some areas the fighting has virtually halted, partly because local commanders have been told not to seek contact with the guerrillas. Also, it seems that an increasing number of "local arrangements" are being made between the army and guerrillas. The rebels are split into factions that often are as opposed to each other as to the Salisbury government.

Ambush Feared

While the white-led army is in full flux, a growing number of white farmers are said to be abandoning their bomesteads and taking the "chicken run" to South Africa. In fact, Rhodesians say that no prudent white will go outside the main towns unarmed these days for fear of ambush.

It is universally agreed that a cease-fire is essential if this experiment in joint white-black govern-ment is to survive until the pro-posed elections next fall for a black majority government.
The black leaders of the Executive Couocil, Bishop Abel Muzorewa, the Rev. Ndabaning Sithole and Chief Jeremiah Chiran, express confidence that they can pull it off. They tell of daily con-tacts with guerrillas inside Rhodesia in a bid to arrange an end to the fighting. But outside observers, mindful of the military slippage, re-

Doubts on Elections

Just how the Executive Council can hold elections amid the uncer-tainties is puzzling. If elections for a black Zimbabwe government are to be accepted abroad, a way must be found to get the guerrillas out of the bush and into the ballot box. Yet their leaders, who have denounced the internal settlement, have scorned overtures to return. Mr. Smith, who boasts of economic accomplishments during 12 years of internacional isolation, contends that economic problems, particularly the rising number of unemployed hlacks, pose the most serious threat to the country.

Despite — or because of — economic sanctions, Rhodesia has one of the broadest-based economies in Africa. But the steady exodus of whites and their capital together with the war's drain on manpower underlies the economic crisis.

Early Test Needed

In its statement Tuesday turning down the U.S.-British proposal for an all-party conference, the Execu-tive Council said:

We are satisfied that collectively we have obtained the support of the overwhelming majority of the population for the Salisbury [inter-nal] agreement and we ask that the British and United States governments should consider putting this rolina until her case has been finalto an early test.

"We are not concerned so much with formal recognition as we are with countering the effects of the trade so that we can alleviate un-employment among blacks and proceed to majority rule with a

The decision to purchase the series was described by Jochen Stinauer, a spokesman for a region-al station that negociated on behalf of one of the two major state-subsidized networks, as being made by "people who are conscious of the importance of 'Holocaust' and of the value it can have for the Ger-

Swissair Chief Blames Carter For Fare War

ZURICH, April 28 (AP)—Swissair President Armin Baltensweiler today charged the Carter administration with responsibility for what he called a disastrous tariff battle between international airlines on North Atlande routes.

"Remembering a few election promises, the Carter administration is riding on the wave of politically orientated consumer protection and is opening all locks. Mr. Bal-tensweiler told a company meeting. "We believe there will have to be a few victims on the battlefield before common sense prevails again."

He said that Swissair did not join the "panicky flight forward" of some airlines in seeking to retain market shares. Yet, he said, the company had to lower fares to a point where they were no longer meeting costs, despite good sales.

Swissair last year reported a record net profit of 51.9 million Swiss francs (about $26.6 million), an 18.2-per-cent gain over 1976.

Parents Blamed for Upbringing, Unhappy Son Files Damage Suit

BOULDER, Colo., April 28 (UPI)—Tom Hansen, unhappy with his life, has filed a damage suit in district court against his parents, who he says gave him an improper upbringing. Mr. Hansen, 25, says that he will need psychiatric care for the rest of his life.

The suit charges that Richard and Shirley Hansen neglected their son's needs for food, clothing, shelter and psychological support at crucial periods of his life and that Mr. Hansen was forced at the age of 14 to "work long hours at menial labor on little food."

The suit, which seeks $250,000 in medical expenses and $100,000 in punitive damages, also accuses Richard Hansen of treating his son as a "social outcast, subjecting him to humiliation and ridicule and physically attacking him."

Tom Hansen's attorney, John Taussig ir., said that the suit may be the first of its kind. "Basically, what we are doing is bringing a suit for malpractice of parenting," he said, adding that he believes parents should be held responsible for damage to the physical and mental health of their children.

U.S.-Born Woman May Be in Disfavor

Top English Interpreter Missing From Peking Scene

By Linda Mathews

HONG KONG — Nancy Tang, the U.S.-born interpreter who served Mao Tse-tung and Chou En-lai in their historic 1972 meeting with President Richard Nixon, has disappeared from public view in Peking and may have been sent to the countryside for "re-education."

Miss Tang, 35. China's foremost English interpreter and its most visible woman official, has not appeared at public functions or been mentioned in the governmentcontrolled media since October, according to diplomatie sources here. An absence of such length on the part of a Chinese official often means that the official has fallen into disfavor, although in Miss Tang's case there are few clues to the mistakes she may have committed or to her whereabouts. A Taiwan newspaper reported last week that she recently had been arrested as a bostage to preShevchenko's Example

According to the Taiwan news-paper, the Youth Warrior Daily, Mr. Tang had tried to follow the example of Arkady Shevchenko, the Soviet UN under-secretary who refused to return to Moscow. But the Taipei newspaper said that Peking security agents bad discovered Mr. Tang's defection plans and put him under strict surveillance until he can be replaced.

Sources here, however, are dubious about the Taiwan report. The elder Tang, who went to New York in the late 1930s to edit the Overseas Chinese Daily, a Chinese-lan-guage newspaper, presumably had plenty of opportunities to switch al-legiances then. But in 1951 he voluntarily returned to China and rose through the ranks until he became the persocal English-language in-

The disappearance of Miss Tang was a surprise because she had appeared to be making a meteoric, untroubled rise through the Chinese hierarchy.

Her bespectacled face and distinctly American accent became familiar to millions of U.S. television viewers in February, 1972, during the Nixon visit to Peking. After that, she served as the official interpreter at almost every meeting Mao or Chou held with English-speaking guests, including the meeting last August between Communist Party Chairman Hua Kuo-feng and Secretary of State Cyrus Vance.

When the now discredited "Gang of Four" was eharged with trying to usurp Mao's authority. O'Neill Discloses His Net Value Early

By Steven V. Roberts

WASHINGTON, April 28 (NYT)—Describing himself as "a man of modest means," House Speaker Thomas O'Neill jr. disclosed yesterday that his net worth was $181,000. This figure was $56,000 higher than the one Rep. O'Neill provided in December.

The Massachusens Democrat, whose finances have previously been the subject of controversy, said that his main assets consist of three residences and a piece of land on Cape Cod. He has occasionally invested in stocks and other ventures, but sold most of them before he became speaker in January of Rep. O'Neill also published his' financial disclosure statement, which is due to be filed by all members of Congress by Sunday. Many members have been grumbling about the disclosure law as the deadline approaches, and Rep. O'Neill said that he filed early in order to "set an example" for his colleagues.

"It's not as difficult as everyone in the House believes it is," be said.

When it adopted the disclosure provision. Congress also limited members' outside earnings to 15 per cent of their salaries, or $8,625. This income limit, which goes into effect next year, would be codified into federal law by a bill that is now moving through the House.

Many members have complained that disclosing their assets could subject their families to threats of kidnapping and extortion. Some also feel that the income limit is too strict, and io his disclosure statement, which only covered the last

Proxmire Bars Miss Liberty For $1 Coin

WASHINGTON, April 28 (IHT)-Supporters of Miss Liberty — the traditional female figure on U.S. coins — and women's suffrage leader Susan Brownell Anthony (1820-1906) have clashed in Congress over the Treasury Department's plan for issuing a new U.S. dollar

Legislation was introduced vesterday to create the coin and the House subcommittee on coinage will bold hearings next month. Treasury Secretary Michael Blumenthal wants coin to bear the image of the symbolic Miss Liberty. But the women's caucus in the House of Representatives wants it to commemorate a real woman -Susan Anthony, for instance.

Sen. William Proxmire, chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, has promised to amend the bill when it reaches his committee to require it to carry the Anthony image.

Uncertainty in Asia's Center

Down through the centuries, Afghanistan bas been the contested invasion route of Asia — a region that has played a part for that continent not dissimilar to the role of Europe's Low Countries. Within more recent times, after the Czarist empire extended over Central Asia and the British over India, the question of who ruled Afghanistan was vital to world politics.

The British have left India and Pakistan but the Russians still dominate the northern portion of Asia, from the Urals to the Kuriles — and Afghan politics bulk as large as when British troops marched to Kabul or Russians captured Panjdeh in the north in the 19th century, when dynasties struggled for the emirate that sought to govern the land. And now that a military group claims to have seized power from President Mohammed Daud, who had turned his cousin's royal regime into a republic of sorts, the tensions of Kahul reach from Moscow to Washington, from New Delhi and Islamabad

For the United States and the Soviet Union have been competing in Afghanistan albeit in a reasonably constructive fashion through economic and arms assistance. As long as Afghanistan held more or less to the middle of the rocky road every poor state must tread, the strategic problem that the country presented was not acute. With the Marxist and "anti-imperialist" sentiments of so many revolutionary groups in the Third World as well as the thrusting of the Soviet Union (and Cuba) into so many nations, events in Afghanistan are bound to capture the attention of the world.

It is too early to know whether the Afghans will go the way of the Ethiopians, or, if they do, what effect this will have on the na-tions to the south of the Khyber Pass. What made Ethiopia so important was its conflict with the Somalis; what could give an overturn in Kabul a similar impact is the uncertain position of the Pathans, who live on both sides of the Pakistani-Afghan border, and who traditionally have the sympathies of Afghanistan. But this potential development will doubtless he studied closely hy China, which has had a close association with Pakistan, as well as in Washington. All that is certain now is that the center of Asia is uncertain, and that this must make many governments uneasy.

Steep Cost of Substitute Dollars

Treasury Secretary Michael Blumenthal may face some awkward moments this weekend at the International Monetary Fund's meeting in Mexico City. At issue is a proposal being pressed by the fund's managing director, Johannes Witteveen, to substitute the IMF's own international currency known as Special Drawing Rights - for some of the dollars now being held by foreign governments. The general concept is a good one, hut attempting to swap SDRs for dollars now would threaten the fragile structure of international finance.

Witteveen proposes to collect some of the hillions of dollars purchased by foreign governments in recent years in (largely vain) attempts to support the dollar's exchange rate. In their place, these governments would get SDRs, the "money" the IMF itself creates. Fund staff members are pushing the plan with the long-term objective of replacing the traditional exchange media - gold and dollars - in government-to-government transac-

A gradual shift to SDRs does make longerm sense. Unlike real gold, the fund's "paper gold" costs nothing to produce. But substitution today - even serious talk of substitution - might have quite the opposite effect. Exchange rates are unstable because corporations and individuals with vast financial resources can and do switch from currency to currency in attempts to avoid exchange risks. Paring away $10 or $20 billion held hy governments would have no effect on the $500 billion now sloshing around international financial markets.

It is possible, moreover, that the substitution of SDRs for dollars by foreign central hanks would make nervous private currencyholders readier to dump their dollars at the first sign of trouble. If the closest allies of the United States are unwilling to keep their dollars, the reasoning might go, why should we?

Pessimists suggest an even graver result of the plan. Oil prices are now set in dollars and OPEC's strongest member, Saudi Arabia, holds most of its surplus billions in dollars. The depreciation of the dollar has led some OPEC members to demand that oil be priced in SDRs whose value is not sharply affected by the dollar's decline. Should Europe and Japan signal their distrust of the dollar by switching to the SDR it is possible that OPEC would also switch. The result could be higher oil prices for everyone - all countries pay OPEC in dollars - and the creation of yet another source of instability in world ex-

If little good and much harm could come of the Witteveen plan, why should Secretary Blumenthal's opposition be met with hostility? The IMF staff, committed to promoting the SDR, believes that substitution for dollars is the only way to get European bankers to go along with a new issue of their "paper More important, though, the plan could become a focus for foreign governments angry over the Carter administration's refusal to help stadilize the value of the dollar. Many governments would prefer a world in which the dollar played a less critical role in international finance, and the substitution plan is a gesture in that direction.

Neither reason is good enough to disturb the status quo. Other governments might get some satisfaction from a symbolic slap at U.S. policies. But they stand to lose as much as the United States from any further decline of the dollar or increase in oil prices. SDRs do eventually deserve a more important place. in international finance, but their role should only he upgraded in calmer times.

Remember the Concorde?

A year ago, most people living around New York's Kennedy International Airport were adamantly opposed to letting the French-British supersonic jetliner land there, even on a test basis, because of its alleged noise and pollution. Today, four months since the Coocorde finally began using Kennedy, there is a dramatic change. The latest FAA sampling shows that the opposition has dropped to 36 per cent of 1,818 airport-area residents surveyed. Those approving has climbed to 24 per cent. The Concorde may be a technologieal marvel or a fuel-wasting white elephant. But, as it has demonstrated both at Kennedy and at Dulles Airport outside Washington, it is as good a neighbor as many commercial jets flying today and it is certainly not the environmental ogre its opponents would have you believe it is.

Different U.S. Responses

When the UN Security Council last May voted unanimously to have Rhodesian information offices shut down around the world, the State Department sheepishly hastened to oblige. If the UN resolved to put the public library to the torch, the State Department prohably would not resist; and only vigorous protest by conservative civil libertarians kent the Rhodesian information office in New York from being boarded up.

Consider, if you will, the remarkably different response to the suggestion that, as a protest over continuing terrorism, Washingtoo close the New York office of the terrorist Palestine Liberation Organization. The State Department that promptly notified the Rhodesians to pack their bags — was struck dumb by the very idea of ordering the PLO to skedaddle. When Washington finally got around to responding, the response was to reiterate its welcome to the terrorists.

Energy and the Sun

The sun alone may not be the answer to the nation's energy problems. It may not even be a partial answer of real significance in the very oear future. But because of its enviroomental cleanoess and its inexhaustible supply it certainly deserves serious attention as a possible solution.

For that reasoo, the recent evidence that it is receiving a high degree of attention, and in places where attention really counts, comes as a decided encouragement to all who understand the crucial nature of America's energy problems.

The New U.S. Diplomacy of Incoherence

By James Reston

WASHINGTON—The conduct of U.S. foreign policy seems very strange these days. There is a great deal of running around and popping off, with everybody mind-ing somebody else's business, but with very little coherence or visible

This is apparently the New Diplomacy, or if you prefer, the democratization of foreign policy, but the net result seems to be that no-body now knows who can speak for the United States of the New York Paris of the New Yo the United States, oot even the President, with assurance that his commitments will be honored.

The U.S. promise of F-15 fighter aircraft to Saudi Arabia is only the latest example. It was made originally by President Ford and then confirmed twice by Presideot Carter, but is oow eballenged by the Congress, which is fair enough.

This is a decision, under present law, for both the executive and legislative branches of the U.S. gov-ernment, but Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan is here lobbying for the shipment of planes to Israel, which is understandable, but also against Carter's decision to sell planes to Saudi Arabia, which is not exactly the same thing.

Rump Session

For example, Dayan met Thursday morning privately with Sens. Church, Case, Javits, Stone, Sar-banes and Jackson, all supporters of the Israeli case against the Presiwas sort of a private rump session of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, all the senators being sharp differences over political and economic questions.

Last year, the United States bemembers except Jackson

There was a time in this capital when a British ambassador was repressed a preference in a social gathering for ooe presidential can-didate over the other, but that was permissible in the conduct of foreign relations.

Another strange procedure: Officials at the highest level here oow say that, unable to reach agreement with Senate leaders to withdraw or postpone indefinitely the proposal to sell the planes to Israel, Egypt and Saudi Arabia, the administration will submit it to the Congress this weekend and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will vote on each proposal separately early next week in private session, without taking any more testimooy or holding any public hearings.

This is one aspect of the oew "democratic" foreign policy procedure that is so controversial that it may be overturned in the next few dear but it is a so to be a second or the second of the second or the second of the second or the days, but it is an illustration of the confusion of authority that is now baffling this capital, and many other capitals as well.

Also, just to add to the confusion, there is a serious question here whether any legislation au-

President's authority to sell these planes is constitutional.

This is a complicated point, now under fierce debate. But since delegations of quasi-legislative authori-ty to independent or executive braneb agencies can only be accomplished by legislation involving the assent of both Houses of the Con-gress and the President, it can be argued that any measure withdraw-ing that delegation as exercised in a particular case, would likewise re-quire legislation involving the assent of both Houses and the Presi-

All that will probably have to be left to the courts at some future time. Meanwhile, the view at the White House is that the main issue at stake is the President's right and ability to conduct the foreign policy of the nation, without excessive interference by the Congress or the ministers of foreign states.

in some ways, the Carter admin-istration has invited these problems. It has scattered executive aulems. It has scattered executive authority in the field of foreign affairs, so that nobody quite knows whether the secretary of state, just out of Moscow on a consoling mission, or Zbigniew Brzezinski, now on his way to China, or Vice President Mondale, on his way to Southeast Asia, is really speaking in a coherent voice for the President.

Also, if the Carter administration presumes to tell Rhodesia that it is oot satisfied with the internal compromises reached for the political future of that country, it cannot be appropriated if Downs are been to surprised if Dayan comes here to lobby for Israel — though arguing his case with senators is oot the same as his legitimate right to state his case to the secretary of state and the President, who are the re-sponsible officials.

The Japanese have a somewhat different definition. The Japanese duffer's handicap indicates the quality of golf that he played when his game was at its peak, and agoi not necessarily have any relation to the scores he happens to be turning at the moment. His handicap will be lowered as his game improves, but rarely will a succession of bad scores be considered grounds for increasing it. Anyone no longer increasing it. Anyone no longer able to play to the handicap that he earned in his best days is simply considered to be "off his game."

Upgrading

The rationale for this line of thinking is the same as that applied to grades in judo, kendo, Japanesc chess and other traditional sports.

Grades go up, but never down.

And this, in turn, leads us to the heart of the matter. Io Japan's group-oriented society, rank is of paramount importance, for the in-

Given this background, the Kanto Golf Association has made a bold decision. According to KGA officials, about 50 of the KGA-affiliated golf courses in central Japan have subscribed to the new system, and more are expected to Johnson

Members of KGA-affiliated courses may send their scores to the KGA computer system which will keep their handicaps up to date. For example, the Educational Development Corp., of Newton, Mass., has a $70-million contract which involves running technical universities, handing out bachelor of science degrees to Algerians and switching students from French to English.

Most of the U.S. firms are settling in for contracts stretching over 10 years — five years to build a factory and five to make sure it runs smoothly and that thousands of Algerians are trained for the job. At Sidi Bel Abbes, a former

French Foreign Legioo garrison town, bundreds of U.S. technicians, their wives and families — plus doctors, and teachers — have moved into ocwly built housing to carry out the GTE contract. U.S. companies complain that Washington is still not helping them with export financing in the way that West European govern-way of doing business. In fact, more and more joint Algerian-U.S. companies are being set up.

The Art Market—

Contrasting the Attitudes of Collectors

By Souren Melikian ONDON. April 28 (IHT)— Should one collect for love, as the spirit moves one and opportunities present themselves? Or is it advisable to concentrate on one theme such as the work of a single artist in a given area? The contrasted attitudes were illustrated Tuesday and Thursday by two collections auctioned at Sotheby's. Both came from the United States and both had been built up over many years by enlightened amateurs from the sbow-business Daniels of New York, whose collecnon of 80 old master drawings sold Tuesday for £169,000, has been collecting for a quarter century. His first love was impressionism and he now intends to devote himself ex-clusively to 19th-century schools, which is what induced him 10 part with his earlier pieces. Although no deliberate plan guided his purchases, Daniels did have a strong feel for studies of the human body. Portraits, male nudes, baroque scenes, such as the vision of a chariot rolling over clouds while naked bumans watch and gesticulate on earth (by Gaspare Dizidni and sold for £4,400 to D. Tunick of New York), altogether made a consistent pageant.

markably accurate estimates given by expert Julian Stock, it brought more than twice what professionals had been expecting.

The other unusual drawing was a nude study by Francois Boucher done in 1753 for the figure of Apol-lo in his painting "The Raising of the Sun," now in the Wallace Collection. Stock pointed out that the drawing was used by Boucher him-self when he taught at the Ecole Academique de Dessin at Orleans. At £38,500, this, too, doubled its original estimate, underscoring the appreciation due to rarity backed by unimpeachable authenticity. Lithographs

No greater contrast to this highly personal choice could have been of-fered than the 160 lithographs by Toulouse-Lautrec from the collection of the late Ludwig and Erik Charell of Chicago. Built up with the injention of covering the artist's graphic work, it included rarius of which no other specimen would now be obtainable. According to Sotheby's expert Libby Howie, only three impressions of "Madame L" (also called "Chez la Gantiere") have been recorded and, she added, "there will be no other opportunity of acquiring one in the opportunity of acquiring one in the future." Hence the £2,000 it brought yesterday.

"Idylie Princiere," the portrait of a woman shown sideways with a dwarflike moustachioed fellow ogling her ferociously in the back-ground, was represented by a trial proof before the final edition of only 15 impressions—a unique piece because of its mint condition. When Toulouse-Lautrec did this in 1897, he was experimenting with a combination of techniques—laying on the stone splasbes of mustardy yellow with a toothbrush, then us-

Feste, particularly in Eddison's swaggerparticularly in Eddison's swaggering performance—halfway between the madness of King Lear and the sanity of his fool—is a commanding figure, summoning the action out of the dark and stilling it when he sings his songs. "Mistress Mine" becomes a chilling premonition of mortality with the emphasis all on "youth's a stuff will not endure." and "Come Away Death" has the urgent invitation of a suicide.

This depth of feeling is matched by the marvelous Viola of Eileen Atkins, whose performance is marked by a great sensitivity, an awareness of emotional truth, so that lines often spoken simply for a laugh-her "Poor lady, she were better love her dream" when the disguised Viola realizes that Olivia is in love with her-here also are full of compassion for human fool-

The pleasures of such a production are subtle, for, in such an approach, the knockabout humor of Sir Toby Belch and Sir Andrew Aguecheek suffers. Both are well acted but with a realism that takes away their humor, They can, after all, seem a classic comic pairing, an Elizabethan Laurel and Hardy: a fat man with an exaggerated idea of his own wit bullying a thin silly play, Michael Denison's Malvolio is, however, ripely comic, beautifully setting himself up for his fall. In Bernard Culshaw's simple hut effective setting, using a cartload full of props to great effect, the play is more astringent than usual, but all the more bracing for that,

The ending of John Ford's "Tis Pity She's a Whore" at the Royal Shakespeare Company's Ware-house Theatre must be the most bloody and cynical in drama. Bod-Giovanni still clutching the heart he has cut out of his sister in an agony of love, litter the stage. The worst of the villians is allowed to get away with his murders and mutilations because he was not motivated by self-interest but rather by a disinterested pleasure in revenge. The play has a genuine, lurid power, excellently realized in Ron Daniels's modern-dress production. The cast achieves the difficult feat of seeming contemporary while speaking Ford's terse, but sometimes inflated, verse. The tragedy here is mainly that of Annabella, played by Barbara Kellerman as a sweet hut easily persuaded girl. Her hrother, Giovanni, is played by Simon Rouse as a notable neurotic from the beginning, a self-obsessed man intent on hreaking taboos.

There is some excellent comic relief supplied by Peter Clough as a doltisb suitor and Paul Imhusch as his more worldly uncle, which provides a necessary counterpoint to the bloody violence and passion as well as providing an innocent vic-tim to die a lingering death.

Ford's characters make even the double-crossing, vindictive and warring noblemen of the third part of "Henry VI" at the Aldwych seem quite normal, well-behaved

The last part of this finely staged trilogy is a fitting climax and at last gives Alan Howard a proper opportunity to display his acting. He is at his best as a weary king welcoming the man who bas come to murder

This last part has perhaps the most electrifying moment in the sequence, the confrontation beeen the victorious Margaret and the defeated York. In its passion it is almost operatic, and Helen Mirren's vicious queen and Emrys James's broken pretender make it intensely moving.

It is often the most artificial moments in the plays that have the greatest effect. The farewell in rhymed verse between David Swift's hulldoglike Talbot and his young son is another highlight of the sequence.

But what is especially impressive is the sweep and magnificence of the whole, the coherence imposed by the authority of director Terry Hands and his actors. It is a superb

Mayor of Paris Makes His Social Debut at Ball

By Hebe Dorsey

DARIS, April 28 (IHT)—Paris Mayor Jacques Chirac, who rarely goes to parties, made his so-cial debut last night at an American function, the April in Paris ball.

Surrounded by photographers and obviously loving every minute of it, the mayor was attending the New York-hased charity ball, which for 27 years has distributed more than $4 million to French charities. The ball, founded by C.C. Philippe and the late Elsa Maxwell. is normally held in New York and in November. It was the first time that it was held in Paris and in April. The purpose of the Paris ball, a smaller and choicier affair, was to serve as social padding for New York's mammoth and money-making ball, which will still take place next full.

The party last night turned out to be much more than a party. Mr. Chirac declared his love for America and the Americans.

The mayor said he would like to go to New York, adding: "As a matter of fact, I'm planning a trip to the United States soon because I know that my image is very bad there. I want to change it.

AUTHORS WANTED

"I'm happy to see Americans," he said. "I love the States. You know, I studied at Harvard."

Mr. Chirac and his wife came with Jacqueline Citroen, Chanel's directrice, who is an old friend of Mrs. Chirac. Asked how she got Mr. Chirac to come, Mrs. Citroen said: "I told him that the New York mayor always greets the French delegation at the New York ball. So, he accepted."

Foreign Buying Buoys Wall St.

NEW YORK, April 28 (AP-DJ)—The flood of tor-eign capital into Wall Street, which has belped boost the recent rally on the New York Stock Exchange, shows little sign of slackening soon, analysts say.

The key to the inflow, analysts agree, was the growing feeling earlier this mooth that the dollar was oearing the bottom of its loog slide in foreign-exchange trading.

Some analysts even credit foreign investors with triggering the market's rebound. And at any rate, the foreign buying spree has certainly contributed to the record trading volume and the sharp rise in prices—particularly for the blue chips in the Dow Jones in-

The Dow Jones has risen 8.3 percent, or more than 63 points, since April 12, closing yesterday BI 829.92, Standard & Poor's composite index during the same period gained 6.3 percent, or 5.75 points to 95.86, while the market-value index on the American Stock Exchange was up 2.5 percent, or 3.31 points, Although beavy trading by U.S. institutional investors such as pension funds, mutual funds and insurance companies, has dwarfed other factors in the upsurge, analysts say foreign "buy" orders bave beeo significant and are cootinuing. Moreover, "I don't think overseas interest in Wall Street will dry up soon," says Henry Safran, manager of the London office of Bache Halsey Stuart Shields.

"The only attractive stocks in the world markets at the moment are in the U.S. and Singapore—and if you go for fundamentals, it is the U.S.," says another Bache representative, Yeo Boon Khim, in Singa-

C.Y. Cbung, vice president of Sun Hung Kai Securities, a subsidiary of Hong Koog's largest stock brokerage firm adds that turnover in U.S. stocks has doubled in the last two weeks.

Not all non-U.S. investors are spending money on Wall Street however. Many Japanese money managers bought U.S. stocks last year and were doubly burned by the market's decline and the sharp appreciation of the yen and are still leary of Wall Street. "Japanese investments to New York stocks are on the ruoway, but they haven't taken off yet," says an official of Nikko Securities, one of the top four brokerage firms in Tokyo. Another factor, analysts add, kerage firms in Tokyo. Another factor, analysts add, is the boom on their own exchange.

Another notable exception is Mideast oil money, which has generally favored more conservative U.S. investments. In London, David Sambar, executive vice-president of the Sharjah group, an investment advisory firm for Arab businessmen, says that "we haven't seen any demand (for U.S. stocks) on the part of our elients." Despite the "psychological euphoria" oo Wall Street recently, be says, "the baeuphoria" oo Wall Street recently, be says, "the ba-sic problems in the U.S. economy are sull there. We aren't sure that anything more than lip service has been paid to the problem of inflation," and strength in corporate earnings has been spotty, he adds.

However, U.S. stocks have gotten much cheaper for iovestors in Britain, West Germany, Switzerland and other countries as a result of the weakness of the dollar against their currencies.

Another reason for the general foreign interest in U.S. stocks is that other national markets, with the exception of Tokyo, have oot been as attractive to investors. The investments also reflect some improvement in the overseas assessment of the Carter administration as well as the relative health of the U.S. economy in comparison with other nations.

"We feel there has been a correction in the previous lack of confidence in the administration, Hans Kessler, senior vice president of Swiss Bank-Corp. "The Swiss have returned heavily to the U.S. market in the last few days," he adds.

OPEC-U.S. Transactions Said Balanced

WASHINGTON, April 28-A study of direct transactions be-tween the United States and members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries showed they were virtually balanced from 1974 through 1977, the Commerce Department reported today.

By boosting to 7¼ from 7 percent its target interest rate on federal funds, uncommitted reserves banks lead each other, the Fed placed sharp upward pressure on commercial banks' prime, or minimum, interest charge oo corporate loans, which has been at 8 percent since early this year. Chase Manhattan Bank responded today by raising its prime rate to 8¼ percent. Chase's move was followed by several other major New York banks and, although Citibank kept its rate unchanged at 8 percent, analysts think the move will become industrywide by oext week.

In foreign-exchange trading, the dollar firmed against major currencies a result of the higher prime rates, dealers said.

Analysts also expect the Fed to soon boost to 6% or 7 percent from 6½ percent its discount rate, the interest charged on loans to member com-

There are oo ifs, ands, or buts about it—the Fed tightened," stated Devid M. Jones, an economist for the securities firm of Aubrey G. Lanston & Co. "You've got to give (Fed chairman William) Miller credit" for his determination to fight inflation, he added.

The Fed signalled the tightening by allowing the interest rate on federal funds to rise to 7 5/16 percent yesterday before taking offsetting action. The interest rate on federal funds serves as an indication of the availability of reserves in the banking network and serves as a kind of base from which most other interest rates are scaled upward.

"It will probably trigger a substantial increase in member bank borrowings from the Fed and result in a boost in the discount rate," said Mr. Jones. With the discount rate at 6½ percent, well below the rate on federal funds, banks are likely to take advantage of the relative bargain by borrowing from the Fed. In the week ended Wednesday, when federal funds hovered around 7 percent, member bank borrowings from the Fed jumped to an average of $760 million from $203 million the previous

The tighter credit policy has had a beneficial effect on the dollar, tempering the need for foreign central banks to acquire the currency in support operations. Thus, central banks have had a shrinking number of dollars to invest in U.S. government securities. THE PROTESTANT TEMPERAMENT Patterns of Child-Rearing, Religious Experience, and the Self in Early America By Philip Greven. Alfred A. Knopf. 431 pp. $15. Reviewed by Fred M. Hechinger scholarship wears a bright halo in academic world and is worshipped by the general public. It is therefore not surprising that many able historians suffer from science envy, a conditioo that makes them clutter up perfectly sound research with an ar-tificial "categorizing" copied from the way scientists classify the elements. Unfortunately, what works in explaining the orderly scheme of nature is often less successful in at-tempts to explain the more com-plex relationship between human oature, history and politics.

Philip Greven is a case in point. In "The Protestant Temperament," he has brought together many fasci-nating and historically enlightening accounts of child rearing in early America. He has diligeotly explored the connections, between religious doctrine and attitudes toward childhood. He once again provides interesting insights into the early American family as be did in his earlier writings. But, instead of allowing history its scope of con-tradictions and uncertainties, he tries to squeeze his findings into a set of classifications—fitting all early Americans into the slots of 'evangelicals," "moderates" and

"genteels." Greven offers an awesome and eloquent account of the early Puritans' unbending devotion to a stern and demanding God. It was a devo-tion that allowed no straying from a path of self-sacrificing purity. All carnal desires, even between hus-band and wife, were regarded as temptations of the devil, and since children thus were born of sinful activity ("filthy" is the term fre-quently applied), they were considered in a state of natural evil. Their will had to be hroken before they could, in turn, devote their lives to total obedience to God and pareots. The harmony of the family under such circumstances flows, not from love, but from submission—women to men, children to pareots, men to God. Particularly fascinatiog is Greven's discovery of this evangelicals constant fear that servants and grandparents might act as cor-rupters of children by secretly of-fering them forbidden kindness. Grandparents were, of course, more troublesome since they were immune to the rule that it was better to lose a good servant than to hring up a bad child.

Today's conservatives, inheritors of the evangelical theory of child rearing, might well be reminded that Greven's picture of Puritan parents, though accurate in theory, should not obscure the fact that even the sternest of them did love their children in their fashion. Cottoo Mather, who was survived hy only two of his 15 children, was moved during a measles epidemic in 1713 that claimed three of his children and his wife in less than two weeks to make this moving entry in his diary:

Nov. 21. This day I attended the Funeral of my two: Eleazar and MODERN America views sci-entists as the aristocrats of scholarship. "Scientific method" She was two years, and about seven Months . . . Lord, I am oppressed; undertake for me!"

Greven develops an interesting theory about the conflict created by the attitudes of evangelical men toward women and toward God. On the one hand maleness was characterized by "activity, strength, combativeness, wisdom and great-oess of soul, compared with femi-ninity's "passivity," weakness, dependency, emotionalism, and self-doubt." Yet, in their relationship to God, men assumed the submissive—thus female—role.

The discussion of the "moderates" begins with interesting observations of child rearing. Breaking the child's will is replaced by a more gentle bending; love sub-stitutes for fear, obedience arises from respect, ool domination. In Greven's scheme, this relaxation of the reins appears as something of a transition to ultimate delegation of childcare hy the "genteel" to a staff of servants, leaving the parents as a remote but dimly respected and filially loved authority.

The strain such categorizing imposes on the natural floor of history stems from the lack of any credible temperamental kinship between such "moderates" as John Adams, Thomas Jefferson and Benjamin Franklin, among others. It would be easier to ascribe their commoo bonds to intellectual roots in the Age of Reason than to any artifi-cially created rubric. Jefferson's pioneering insistence on the separation of church and state, for instance, is surely more than mere moderation of the evangelicals' religious zeal. And the genteels exub-crant enjoyment of the good life, including wine, women and song, seems to be very simply the result of worldly success. Those who had grown conservative with wealth and established social status were understandably prone to loyalty to the status quo, including the British monarchy. If such amusing docu-ments as the raucous diary of William Bird prove anything, it is merely that this period, too, had its equivalent of Beautiful People and Dirty Old Men. (After a wild night with a woman he had picked up in the park, he remarked, " . . slept preity well, but neglected my prayers.")

Much of Greven's anecdotal history is extremely helpful to a fuller understanding of early America's customs and attitudes. Many of the prejudices and myths, particularly those relating to sexual matters, provide a fuller comprehension of American mores and conflicts today. These accounts could readily stand the test of scholarly as well as general-reader interest without Greven's sometimes forced attempts to read too much "femininity" into the period's preoccupation with elegant dress and long hair among the more "genteel," less "moderate" circles.

NEW YORK, April 28 (AP)— Lightweight champioo Roberto Duran of Panama made successful his return to Madison Square Garden after an absence of nearly six years, scoring a 10-round unanimous decisioo last night over Adolfo Viruet

Duran cooceded the first two rounds to the left-hander but then controlled most of the rest of the noo-title fight. He mixed body punches with punches to the head to conquer Viruet, whose nose bled profusely in the ninth round.

But Viruet, a New York-born Puerto Rican, refused to go down under the onslaught of a puncher who has 52 knockdowns in 62 victories against only one loss. Controversy surrounded the fight, which matched the unassuming, usually subdued Viruet and a man who admitted that he hated the entire Viruet family. Duran has fought Adolfo's brother Edwin twice and beaten him twice.

After the fight was over and the decision announced, Edwin came into the ring and tried to start a fight with Duran, Duran's trainer, Ray Arcel, was knocked down in Referee Arthur Mercante scored the non-title bout 7 rounds for Duran, 2 for Viruet and 1 even. Judge Tony Castellano scored it 7-3 Duran.

Only Loss

In his last appearance at the Garden, in November of 1972, Duran sustained his only loss, a 10-round decision to Esteben deJesus. Who Will Be 2nd Black To Manage in the Majors? By Dave Anderson

NEW YORK, April 28 (NYT)—Baseball's ooce and only black manager, Frank Robinson, is oow a coach with the Baltimore Orioles and, understandably, he hopes to be hired as a major league manager again. But becoming baseball's second black manager might be al-most as difficult as baving become baseball's first black manager.

"I think baseball has backed off "I think baseball has backed off some now," he was saying before the Orioles opened a two-game series at Yankee Stadium earlier this week. "There's no pressure for baseball to come up with a blackmanager oow, nobody is kicking up a fuss like they were before the Cleveland Indians hired me."

If there is oo fuss, baseball will prefer to snooze on the status quo. But at a time when two of the lead-ing teams in the National Basketball Association bave black coaches, Willis Reed of the New York Knicks and Lenny Wilkins of the Seattle Super Sonics, it is to be wondered why baseball (and pro football for that matter) does not consider even one black man worthy to be a motivator or strategist, or both. Another black manager, Commissioner Bowie Kuhn should remind himself, would indeed be in the best interests of baseball.

"I don't want to list everybody who's qualified because I might leave somebody out," Frank Rob-inson said, "but I think Maury Wills should be a major league manager.

Content With Lemon

Of the three, Larry Doby would appear to have the best eventual opportunity, primarily because of Bill Veeck, the White Sox owner. Bill Veeck is content with Bob Lemon as his manager now but if the change ever were to occur, Veeck probably would not hesitate to name Larry Dohy as Bob Lemon's successor.

Gradually, a managerial chance for Elston Howard, Larry Doby or Jim Gilliam diminishes season by season. Doby is 53 years old, Howard and Gilliam each 49 — ages when they soon might be consid-ered too old to bridge the generation gap with today's young players. Most young players probably don't even remember those three as hig league stars — Howard once the American League's Most Valuable Player as a Yankee catcher, Doby a feared slugging outfielder with the Indians for a decade, Gilliam a Dodgers second baseman so smooth he often was taken for granted. But to today's young players, those three are aging coaches now, not players once on hubble gum cards. Wills, who is 46, also is approaching that dangerous age. and did not see action Unless they are hired soon, it might ond and third sessions. be too late for them.

Younger Candidates Younger candidates also will emerge soon, notably Joe Morgan of the Cincinnati Reds and Lou Brock of the St. Louis Cardinals. "I doo't know if Morgan or Brock would be interested," Frank Rohinson said, "but I think they would be outstanding managers."

Willie McCovey of the Giants is another potential manager. Late last season he asked for an audience with Joe Altobelli and presented the Giants manager with a lineup card that had Bill Madlock at second base. At lunch the day before, Willie McCovey had talked to the two-time National League batting champion about transfer-ring to second base in order to let Darrell Evans play third base. Madlock had agreed. He's now the Giants' second baseman. McCovey obviously had been thinking like a playing."

Popular among the San Francisco fans and respected by his team-mates. Willie McCovey would be a logical choice to be the Giants' manager some day. Willie Stargell of the Pittsburgh Pirates is another potential manager. But baseball's first black manager might also be its second. Clubowners usually prefer to hire managers with experience as managers, even if those managers have been dismissed, as Frank Robinson was in June last year. At the time, the Indians were five games under .500 with a 26-31 record. But with Jeff Torberg as manager, the Indians finished with a 71-90 record, 19 games under .500.

In his two previous seasons, Frank Robinson guided the Iodi-ans to a 79-80 record in 1975 and 81-78 in 1976.

Money Question

"The lodians weren't sound ficancially," Frank Robinsoo recalled. The only free agent they spent big money for was Wnyne Garland and he's had arm trouble. They also signed Paul Dade and Dotphins, Randy Crowder and Horace Speed as free agents but Don Reese, to allow them to try that's like putting Volkswagen parts in a Rolls-Royce engine. Following his dismissal, Frank Robinson was hired by the California Angels as a batting coach, then he managed Calucan io the Mexi-can winter league. He joined the Orioles' coaching staff two months ago.

"When the Orioles hired me,"the when the Orioles little that, the former slugger of the Orioles said with a laugh, "some people wondered if I would be looking over Earl Weaver's shoulder, and I told them, 'He's only 5-8, I can look over his head. I'm oo the inside more now. In our meetings, I get to know what he plans to do before be does it. So oothing he has done has real-ly surprised me."

The surprise that 42-year-old Frank Robinsoo is waiting for is an eveotual offer to manage another major league team.

"It's like before I was hired for the first time," be said. "No feelers yet I just hope I get another chance."

Books are never overdue because they are not lent out for a mingy two weeks or whatever.

The Library Which Inspires Affection

L ONDON (IHT)—The London Library in St. James's Square is a splendid place, arguably the world's finest private library with 1 million books, not only in Enghish but io all the European languages. "I'm not saying we have all Albanian novels," says deputy librarian Douglas Matthews, a kind, blushing man with fly-away hair and no inclination to boast. "But we have a

The library has 20 miles of open stacks, electric-light switches so tricky that the more cautious members switch them on and off with their elbows, and since the day in 1841 when Thomas Carlyle fouoded it in irritation at the inefficiency of the British Museum reading room, it has had a member-ship that includes just about every famous name in English letters.

Booing up on the French Revolution for "A Tale of Two Cioes," Dickens got two carloads of books from the Loodon Library. George Eliot mentions the library a dozen times in letters, T.S. Eliot was for years the library's president and his widow is still un the board. Tennysoo and Robert Lowell were members, so were Charles Darwin and Henry James. Virginia Woolf was a member for 40 years and her father, Leslie Stephen. was a president of the Londoo Library. The greater part of Mrs. Stephen's joy. the young Virginia wrote, "lies in the fact that Mr. Gladstooe is only vice-president." Today's vice-presidents include Sir Isaiah Berlin and Dame Rebecca West.

Dr. Watson Used It

Called upon to become an expert in Chinese pottery within 24 hours, Dr. Watson repaired at once to the London library. Simpressed. James Bond went there in "On Her Majesty's Secret Service," while Nancy Mitford, in "Love in a Cold Climate," ranked the library with Woolworth's and Harrod's as a point of reference for Paris exiles visiting Loodon.

Its intellectual standards and historical associations are enough to make the library unique; even more remarkable is the love it inspires. The magazine Adam devoted an issue to it, while the BBC built a televisioo program on what its producer called, "the pleasure people actually get from using the library, its old-fashioned generosity."

In Adam, Lord David Cecil writes, "It has been said that England has produced three insolutions at once admirable and uoique. I forget what the third is; hut the other two are the Monarchy and the London Lihrary." Angus Wilson says the Londnn Library is as important to him as his reading glasses, "but unlike them it is al-ways there when I want to use it." Viscount Norwich is even fond of the cooking smells in the Travel and Topography section (an Italian restaurant is next door) and says. The greatest joy of all is simply being Affection, Donglas Matthews agrees, is the word that best sums up members' feelings. "It's a very nice feeling that people have." The library, be says, "is a still center in a changing world."

Helpful Staff

One thing that makes the library so pleas-ant is that the staff, freed from the usual pettifoggery, is there to help. There are no fines for overdue books—"We couldn't possibly," says Mr. Marthews.

Books are never overdue because they are not lent for a mingy two weeks or whatever. In fact, they are not lent for a specific period, although the library rather likes to have them back after a year. "Otherwise, we only ask for a book to be returned if another member asks for it." Although members are ont supposed to take out more than 15 books at once, one can arrange to have as many as 40. The cataloguing system, devised in the 1890s, has nothing to do with call numbers or other arcane consense: A miracle of British pragmatism, it is simply alphabetical, so even the foggiest writer can find his way about unaided. This leaves the staff free to he kind and pleasant.

"We're in a position where we're able to introduce every new member to the library," Mr. Matthews says. "A senior member of the staff takes them by the hand and shows them the catalogue." The filing system does have a few quirks: The periodical of the Russian Academy of Sciences, for example, is still called by its pre-revolution, imperial name, the Imperatorskaya Akademia Nauk, because reshelving would have been so com-

Books are also mailed to members although the annual £36 membership fee does not include postage. Aldous Huxley (who mentioned the library in "Antic Hay") or-dered books from California and John Masters is currently doing the same from New Mexico.

Volumes Lost

The library is strongest—which is very strong indeed—in history and literature even though a bomb in World War II destroyed 10,000 volumes and wreaked special havoc among biographies of persons with names beginning with letters from G to J and from S to Z.

Only a few books-those that are very rare or are deemed indecent—are under lock and key io what is called the Librarian's Room, "which is not a librarian's room but a very mixed bag," Mr. Matthews says. A first edition of A.A. Milne is next to Henry Miller's steamy Tropics because it follows alphabetically.

One section that slightly embarrasses Mr. Matthews is labeled Science and Miscellaneous. "It seems to arouse a certain amount of risibility. I wish to God they had just called it Miscellaneous, because that's what it is." Subject headings under Science and Miscellaneous include Sugar, Trusts and Cartels, Tunnels, Sticks (Walking), Vinegar and Women.

At the library's entrance there is a sugges tion book with requests for new books and the librariao's comments (osually. "ordered," "this will be ordered," "this will be considered") on the facing page. Recent requests include Renata Adler's "Speedboat" ("this will be considered") an Urdu and Hindi-English dicdonary ("this will be ordered"), and a question, "Do you think Mary Wollstonecraft would like to be catalogued under Godwin, Mary M.? Aren't you worried about the feminist reation? ("No").

Many literary lights can be seen oo the red leather chairs of the library's comfortable reading room. But if one of the things that irritated Carlyle about the British Museum reading room was that Lord Macauley got better service than he, the London Library treats all its members with equal coo-

One of the humblest was the wife of a railroad-crossing keeper who decided to write a Tudor novel. The library staff chose a reading list. "We sent her state papers and calendars," Mr. Matthews says. "She went on to write others and to become quite a successful covelist. We took a lot of personal interest in her, although we never met

The best description of the library was probably made by the formidable Sir Charles Hagberg Wright, librarian from 1893 to 1940 and a man whose sprawling signature was so impressive that Arthur Ransome found a letter from Hagberg Wright on embossed London Library writ-ing paper more useful than a passport when traveling through Russia io 1914. The London Library, in Hagberg Wright's words, is the Soul's Dispensary.

Nixon's Tragic Flate PEOPLE: Blamed on California

brought him the wrath of many Americans long before the country heard of Watergate, his son-in-law David Elsenhower said. In a magazine interview, the 30-year-old Eisenhower said that Nixon faced at the outset of his national political career the "emotional resistance and enmity" of Americans who saw and cameramen who had gather California as a place culturally "untempered" by Eastern refine-ment. Eisenhower also said that Nixon might have been somewhat haunted by the Kennedy family while io the White House, but his real motivation was to measure up to President Dwight Elsenbower. David Eisenbower made his comments in the June issue of the mag-azine "Your Place." Asked why Nixon seemed to be able to generate personal hostility as oo other figure in recent American history, Eisenhower said, "Well, one reason s that Richard Nixon is a native of California. Throughout his political career be represented California in all of its meanings in American

Suffering from pneumonia in the upper lungs, David Kennedy, the 23-year-old son of the late Robert F. Kennedy and Ethel Kennedy, has been placed in the intensive care unit at Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston. Kennedy, one of II children of the late senator, was said to be in stable condition.

Actor Frank Langella, star of "Dracula," has been presented with the 43d annual Drama League Award for the most distinguished acting performance of the year on Broadway. The award, the bronze Delia Austrian medal, was presented to Langella by actress Jessica Tandy, herself a former winner. The Delia Austrian Medal, named for a former member of the Drama League, has been awarded annually since 1935, when it was won by Katharine Cornell. It is the only acting award in New York voted by audience members.
